

How the French see the American horse.

To Americans, our horses represent a symbol of the American spirit. They are beautiful and noble animals with big hearts who have served us so well. To the French, our horses represent dinner. They are slaughtered, often under cruel conditions, and then sent overseas for human consumption. There are two remaining slaughterhouses in this country. They are both foreign-owned: one French, the other Belgian.

Last year alone 49,325 American horses were butchered.

That number will go higher this year unless you help.

There are more humane ways to deal with unwanted horses. Go to our website below for more information.

You can help end the slaughter.

Support the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act (HR 857)

To make a secure online donation or to learn more about this issue please visit: www.horse-protection.org